

The School Counselor's Role

School counselors provide a variety of services to students, including direct and indirect services. These services are designed to support students' academic, social, and emotional development. School counselors work closely with teachers, parents, and other school staff to ensure that all students have the opportunity to succeed.

- n C...
- n A... A... C...
- n ...
- n C...
- n A...
- n ...
- n A... C...

DELIVER

Delivering services involves providing direct support to students. This can include individual counseling, group counseling, and crisis intervention. School counselors also provide indirect services, such as classroom guidance and career development. The goal is to help students overcome challenges and reach their full potential.

Direct Services with Students

- n ...
- n A... A...
- n C...

Indirect Services for Students

- n C...
- n C...
- n ...

ASSESS

Assessment is a key component of the school counselor's role. It involves gathering information about students' needs and strengths. This information is used to inform improvements to the school's programs and services. For example, data from assessments can show how well students are performing in different areas and where they need additional support.